Introduction: Lack and Joissance

The contemporary epoch is marked by a pervasive, insidious decay, regardless of the particular flavor anyone denouncing the state of things gives its lament. A spiritual inertia that threatens to engulf authentic human experience in a "great ugliness." This condition is not merely a malaise of the soul but a structural entrapment, where the very tools of our civilization—language, societal discourse, and the hyper-mediated structures of the modern world—have become the bars of a prison. We exist in a state where genuine action is increasingly replaced by passive reflection, and the innate drive toward self-generation is stifled by the echoing of pre-existing, commodified discourses.

I'd have been happy by myself, growing in power, bathing in a psychosis akin to that of St. Francis, a lust for dissolution in pure matter that could not be contained. My spirit too was always with me, not yesterday or tomorrow, but ready at hand of the one me that actually exists! I had built my happy island in a sea of skepticism, yet friends in distress have asked me: "Why do you seem insane and always in love with everything? Why do you ride a white horse and carry peace, while they, on a donkey, generate nothing but lame perversions and imaginary wars, for profit?"

I do not think I can give you the key to the prison I escaped, but I can show you why and how I found it. I asked father Chronus for a set of eyes, and at last, he gave me the last gift the Gods still give: they made me blind to my own self, and replaced that ephemeral image with a mirror.

Maybe one night you will lie in bed, maybe with a drug in your bloodstream or some thought of becoming a cockroach in a maze of printed paper, and you will feel your ribcage caving in as if some pachydermata were sitting on your chest and you cannot grasp for air. You would be right, for you have figured out what language has done to you, for you did not do anything with it. Deep down, you dream to disappear, to get some deformity or illness to join the armies of the many, but your good heart still remembers a promise you made long ago to a young boy: a dream, for how folly. The pain becomes so great, not for a longing for simpler times, but for the love you once had, now vanishing, because it cost too much and you made compromises, you had desires, and now feel lost.

You feel your soul, as the whole world, turn into a public bathroom and feel powerless. The little whisper that comforts you at night is not who you think, nor are you who you are: Inside, you are all wet and stinky, and in some dreams you see the demons doing sexual violence on the little that is left noble in your skull, but you learned to love this while complaining about what is actually good. It is good, actually, to stand still and suffer. It is nothing significant, you're just made wrong. Or maybe the whole of the world and history and Nature and its laws are. Surely, your thoughts do not lie to you. Aren't you what you think? Would you not prefer despair over being locked inside your head forever?

Nevertheless! I speak to you, for the trees and birds and bees asked me, and our father the Sun who never comes called me to awake! Rise, Titans of the earth, a new world is beginning. Have you not heard the news!? There is not one sun in the sky, but many, and the way up to grow is for each sideways! Salvation is at hand, salvation from your-self!

0.1 The One: The Undifferentiated Universe (Global Wiki)

The Global Wiki functions as "The One," the undifferentiated ground of potentiality. It serves as the high-density semantic store for the Subject's knowledge, functioning not merely as an archive but as a dynamic repository that allows knowledge to be retrieved with constant token cost, thus enabling the Subject to extend their cognition into the digital domain.

0.2 The Descent: Symmetry Breaking and the Birth of Law (Aura)

Aura acts as "The Descent" in our cosmological cycle—the transition from potentiality to manifestation. It is the foundational field-intelligence layer, a privacy-first, local-first system that passively captures the Subject's actions (timestamp, location, object, grade). It satisfies Clark and Chalmers' conditions for cognitive extension, acting as a phenomenological shield that preserves the integrity of the Subject's observations.

0.3 The Struggle: Praxis (The Social Forge and Selection Engine)

Praxis represents "The Struggle"—the social forge where intention is transformed into falsifiable reality.

- Skin in the Game: Praxis introduces real stakes to increase follow-through, operationalizing the understanding that failure must have a cost for action to have weight.
- Selection Engine for Nobility: Praxis serves as the essential filter to distinguish the Noble from the Artificial. Nobility, defined as excellence in action and fidelity to principles, is present in every Subject but is frequently obscured by the "grey" artificiality of the Mirror Trap. Through the PDCA cycle, Praxis identifies the noble actions that produce real-world results and high-fidelity telemetry, ensuring that the "fire" of individual excellence is preserved in the UberWiki.

0.4 The Ascent: Physis/Rachmaninov as The Ascent

Rachmaninov constitutes "The Ascent"—the translation of the personal Will into the world's order. It serves as the universal translator and causal scoring engine that aligns individual actions with declared ideals, protecting the Subject's internal meaning through an Ontological Firewall.

- The Last Romantic: Rachmaninov preserves the Subject's personal music, filtering external complexity to deliver only the data essential for the task.
- Causal Anchoring: By utilizing the UberWiki's record of intent → action → outcome, Rachmaninov forces AI to reason from the Subject's actual history rather than stochastic training distributions.

Chapter 2

The Reconstruction of the Subject

2.1 The Genesis of the New Man

The vision of the "new man" is not a Utopian aspiration but a technical necessity. As established in Ayu on Fire, the contemporary condition—the "great ugliness"—demands a fundamental realignment of the subject's relationship to power and action. The new man is one who rejects the passive reflection of the attention economy and embraces the innate drive toward self-generation. This involves a structural break from the commodified discourses of the epoch, replacing them with a personal ontology that treats the subject as the primary causal root.

2.2 Mirror Trap & The Fragmented Ego

As detailed in the analysis of the contemporary condition, modern services function as enantiosemic machines—they mirror motives without facilitating action. The Mirror Trap is the structural condition of the attention economy, where individuals are trapped in an oscillation of reactive engagement. This results in a Fragmented Ego, incapable of unified will, scattered across a digital landscape that prioritizes re-share over execution. The recovery of the Subject requires recognizing this trap not as a malaise, but as a design feature of the infrastructure itself, requiring a structural bypass.

2.3 Evola and Stirner: Radical Appropriation

The foundation of the Subject's reconstruction rests on two pillars: Evola's mandate to "Be Radical" and Stirner's mandate for the "Appropriation of the Unique." Evola's call to ignore the "bourgeois reality of life" and maintain a principle of absolute struggle provides the vertical, uncompromising orientation of the AYU stack. It is an architectural specification for refusing structural entropy. Complementing this, Stirner provides the horizontal expansion: self-appropriation. The Unique (Der Einzige) is the subject who reclaims the causal chain by mapping their own ontology and delegating the noise to the machine, thereby reserving the "fire" of the Unique for creative action rather than defensive adaptation.

2.4 The Subject as Causal Root

The synthesis of the "new man" vision with the "Subject as Causal Root" reveals the Subject as the "Why" of all phenomena. While nature flows, the Subject is the "nested time" through which phenomena acquire meaning. By utilizing Peircean abduction (where declared goals serve as the hypothesis for observed action signals), the system formally constitutes the Subject as the root of causality. This integration ensures that the "new man" is not merely a conceptual ideal but an instrument of practice: a Subject whose life generates meaningful differences (events) in the world, validated by their own declared intent.

2.5 Hexagonal Analysis

1. Philosophy: The subject as causal root.
2. Physics: Symmetry breaking in the cognitive field.
3. Math: Eigenvector as invariant in transformations.
4. Biology: Autopoiesis and the extended mind.
5. Literature: The narrative reconstruction of the Unique.
6. History: The revolutionary conservative mandate.
